CIRCULATION CONTEST BIG SUCCESS

MORE THAN 500 NEW NAMES
ADDED TO CIRCULATION; ALL WORKERS PLEASED AND HAPPY

After holding unwavering attention for the past eight weeks the Wm. Semmler Publications Weekly Payroll subscription drive came to a close last Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock, and the strain everyone connected with the affair has been under is happily relieved.

It was a strenuous time all around and an anxious one, to be sure, but now that the end has been reached and the winners named, everyone is pleased and satisfied.

Naturally the great struggle was for that splendid 1936 automobile, the grand capital prize. The Semmler Publications procured the best prizes obtainable. We were willing to pay for good work and we got it, for never before in this section has there been such an all-around successful subscription drive as the one just conducted by these newspapers.

The aggregate vote totals reached an enormous figure, representing hundreds of new and renewal subscriptions, and as a result of the drive the Semmler Publications go into practically every home in that section of Cook and Will counties which these publications represent, a territory covering practically 30 miles square—just the kind of a circulation that does the advertisers the most good.

To these new readers, and the old ones as well, whose patronage made this campaign the success it was, the Semmler Publications is indeed grateful and indebted. On behalf of the Payroll workers and these newspapers the public is entitled to the most sincere thanks for the good-will shown during this campaign.

As to the winners, the figures speak for themselves. To those whose energies carried them through to success the Semmler Newspapers extend heartiest congratulations. We are proud of the workers in this campaign.

While the prizes themselves were remarkable for their value, there are other considerations to be taken into account. During the drive participants have learned much that will be of value in the future. They have made new and pleasing acquaintances, they have formed more correct ideas along business lines and most of them have developed a sense of observation that will pay future dividends.

Some Losers Necessary
Of course it is inevitable in a competition of this kind that all cannot win first place. That was an understood fact at the beginning. To accomplish a given purpose a great amount of energy is needed, and fortune seems to lavish her richest gifts upon those who are equipped to carry the mandates of ambition.

In conclusion we wish to say relations with all club members have been very pleasant and every minute of the work has been enjoyed. They in turn have dealt with an organization, The Liner Circulation Service, Tribune Tower, Chicago, which to the best of its ability made the race one long to be remembered for its wholesome character and square dealing. It was a great race and leaves in bold relief that cardinal virtue—AMBITION.

The Sealed Box
Under lock and seal the ballot box remained in the vaults of the Mokena State Bank the entire last week of the race. At four o'clock sharp—right on the dot—the race was declared closed.

The judges took charge of the box and in the directors' room of the bank the final count was made. The awards were made by the judges under the rules announced at the opening of the drive and according to the statement printed below.

Surprise Party On Eighty Year Old Tinley Park Man

Peter Wannemacher was delightfully surprised by a group of relatives and friends at his home in Tinley Park Friday night in honor of his 80th birthday. Mr. Wannemacher had no inkling of the surprise when a few of the relatives called early in the evening, but when the large group arrived he was very much surprised. About fifty guests were present. The festivities were held on the lawn.

Cards were played and other diversions enjoyed. At midnight a very sumptuous feast was spread and a huge birthday cake with 80 lit candles on it graced the center of the festive board.

Mr. Wannemacher was born on a farm near Mokena on July 18, 1856. He resided on a farm for many years and about twenty years ago he and his wife located in Tinley Park where they have made their home ever since.

Mr. Wannemacher is in good health and is very spry for a man of his advanced age. He is keenly interested in the affairs of the day. The affair was sponsored by Mrs. Wm. Wannemacher and Mrs. George Wannemacher. Among the guests were the honored guest's only brother Herman and sister Mrs. John Vogt of Chicago.

The merrymakers did not depart for their homes until 3:30 the next morning. All had a most delightful time and wished Mr. Wannemacher more such happy events.

Same Manager And Judge of 17 Years Ago Serve

The subscription campaign which has just closed has had a number of interesting incidents connected with it. In November, 1919 we put on our first subscription campaign through the Liner Circulation Service of Chicago. Col. John Ryan was sent to us and though our paper was just a wee infant then, he managed through an energetic campaign to build up our circulation from 300 subscriptions up to 1,000 paid subscriptions at the end of the 7 weeks' campaign. We found Col. Ryan a very capable and trustworthy manager as well as a result producer. That was 17 years ago.

When we decided to put on another subscription campaign this summer we naturally turned to the Liner Circulation Service and to our surprise and satisfaction Col. Ryan was again assigned to us and has again produced splendid results for our paper, putting on about 700 new subscriptions and collecting over 95 per cent of the old subscriptions. An outstanding factor in this campaign is that a very large majority of the 700 subscriptions added to our lists 17 years ago are still with us now, which proves that a properly conducted circulation campaign can bring results.

Another outstanding feature is the fact that Robert Bechstein of Mokena who served as one of our contest judges 17 years ago, again served in like capacity at the close of the contest last Saturday.

The management of this paper takes great pleasure in thanking the public for their splendid support of the campaign, the workers for their excellent work and the Liner Circulation Service and Col. John Ryan for the fair and impartial manner in which the contest was conducted.

FRANKFORT IS OPPOSED TO RELIEF TAX

The proposition of levying a 30 cent tax for relief purposes for Frankfort Township was given a severe trimming at the special town meeting held Tuesday afternoon in the Mokena Motor Sales garage which is the polling place of precinct 2 of the township.

The tax payers present discussed the resolution providing for $6,000 for relief purposes and felt this was high.

One taxpayer from Frankfort declared that if the township voted for the 30 cent special tax, the matter of handling relief should rest with a committee of five members instead of with the supervisor only. He pointed out that the committee should investigate every relief application and determine whether the applicants were entitled to relief or not.

He further pointed out that many chislers are on the relief rolls and should be removed. He stated that a certain family in Frankfort who are on relief gave a big all-night beer party Monday night and cited another case where an ex-employee man now on relief bought an automobile when he received his bonus check instead of paying his old bills or trying to get off relief.

C. M. Cleveland strongly favored the appointment of a township relief committee of five members to be chosen from Frankfort and Mokena, but it seemed to be the opinion of the majority that the question of whether or not the special tax levy should be approved, should be taken care of first.

Another taxpayer of Frankfort stated that farmers in this section have been unable to get help to do threshing and other farm work although there are a number of families directly on relief.

The discussion on the relief and relief committee proposition waxed quite spirited and the trend of the meeting was against levying of the tax.

It was decided that the matter be finally settled at another meeting, so Supervisor Wm. Kampe has issued a call for another special town meeting to be held at the Mokena Motor Sales Garage in Mokena next Tuesday afternoon at 2 p. m. At this meeting final action will be taken as to whether or not the special levy of $6,000 shall be approved for Frankfort township relief.

IVA GILLETT OF MARLEY A CHARMING BRIDE

Another pretty summer wedding took place last Saturday afternoon at four o'clock in the E. D. Gillett home in Marley when Iva Marie, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gillette was united in marriage with Mr. Edward James Sproat, son of Mrs. Minnie Sproat of Maple Road, thus climaxing a friendship of several years.

Preceding the ceremony, Mr. Leon Tonn of Mokena, uncle of the bride sang, "At Dawning" accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Emil Krapp of Mokena.

At the appointed hour, to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Mrs. Walter Spiess, cousin of the bride, the bridal party took their places before a bower of palms and baskets of white and pink phlox which was formed in the bay window of the dining room. Glenn Sproat served his brother as best-man and Miss Francis Gillett, sister of the bride, served as the brides-maid. She wore a lovely gown of peach colored taffeta and net with hat to match and carried an arm bouquet of tea roses.

The bride was lovely in a gown of white lace over white satin, with a finger tip tulle veil caught by a tier of orange blossoms. She wore a brooch which belonged to her great aunt, Mrs. Abner Gillett and carried an arm bouquet of white roses and snap dragons, descended the stairs, at the foot of which she was met by her father, and together they proceeded to the appointed place where they were met by the groom and the bridal party.

The Rev. Ernest L. Snodgrass, pastor of the Marley Community church officiated using the ring ceremony.

The groom and bestman and Mr. Gillett wore buttonholes of white carnations and Mrs. Gillett and Mrs. Sproat, mothers of the bride and groom wore corsages of pink rose buds.

After the ceremony, a reception was held and dinner was served, the immediate families being the guests.

Friends of the bride who assisted in serving were: The Misses Agnes Haley, Eleanor Sabin, Helen Frazer and Florence Bush.

Mr. and Mrs. Sproat left that same evening by motor for a trip to the Dells in Wisconsin. Upon their return they will go to housekeeping in Joliet where the groom is employed as an accountant for the Porter Plate Glass Window Co., and S. Swensen, Contractor.

Mrs. Sproat graduated from the Joliet high school and the Junior College in Joliet and has been teaching in Homer for two years. This year she will teach in the Storm school in district 24.

German Day Draws 5000 To Frankfort Grove

The first German Day sponsored by the German societies of Joliet and Will County held at the Frankfort Grove Sunday afternoon and evening drew a crowd estimated at well over 5,000.

The stars and stripes and the black swastika of the Nazi flag were carried abreast through the green-leaved woods of the grove by American and German veterans of the world war marching to the cheers of the thousands which gathered in a patriotic picnic celebration of the first annual German day in Will county.

The German and American vets tilted the foaming steins of good-will in memory of other days along the Rhine, while the bandstand rang with German concert music and the air grew rich with the aroma of sauerkraut and thuringer. Over 1000 pounds of sauerkraut and 780 pounds of thuringer sausage were sold.

In the morning, the Americans and Germans held a memorial service in the courthouse yard in Joliet. A wreath was laid at the base of the Cantigny post, V.F.W., flag-pole in honor of the men who answered the call of their countries in the World war, by Joseph Jaeger, president of the Joliet German society. Mayor George T. Jones witnessed the ceremony, which took place with massed American and German flags, while squads of Veterans of Foreign Wars, Cantigny post, and of the Association of German World War Veterans, of Chicago, stood at attention. The German association is composed of veterans of the German army who have become naturalized citizens of the United States.

Dr. O. F. Tannenber, consul representing the Nazi government at Chicago, was the principal speaker at the Frankfort grove.

Speaking in German he said, "the Germans show character if they honor their old country and these diligent, patriotic people, make the best American citizens. They apply their power and their knowledge to the advancement of their adopted country."

Germans like peace, Dr. Tannenber said, and the Nazis in Germany rearm and strong, make a balance of power which is good for the peace of Europe.

Otto Ehtor, secretary of the German Day committee and editor of the German paper "Die Deutsche Stunde", also spoke in German, advising the Germans to continue to preserve their old country traditions and ideals.

County Judge George N. Blatt of Will County gave an address and it showed that the United States Congress in its closing days passed a bill which places a 70 per cent tariff on all goods imported from Germany to the United States and he was instrumental in having a resolution passed asking the government to modify this tariff rate.

Joseph Jaeger and a number of other German speakers were heard. A patriotic spirit was given the day's proceedings when a company of uniformed German and American veterans marched thru the grove behind the American and Nazi flags.

The Germans were commanded by Otto Schwark of Chicago, and the American Veterans of Foreign Wars were led by Henry Schilling of Cantigny Post, Joliet and William Bell, of Buddies Post, Chicago.

A group of 20 children marched behind the veterans, carrying their own Nazi insignia.

The whole underlying spirit of the festival was renew the old post-war friendships with this country and to bury the past and heal the scars left by the world war.

Washington.—One of the pieces of legislation enacted by the late seventy-fourth congress was the ship subsidy bill.

Ship Subsidy

Residents of farming communities and smaller cities and towns in the interior probably paid no attention to it whatsoever. Nor was there any outstanding reason apparent why they should give thought to a rather complex and yet far-reaching piece of legislation. But it is important even though the circumstances under which it will be effective may not so appear to the agricultural sections of the country.

The new law provides an undisguised subsidy as the basis of encouragement for development of a new American merchant marine. It is the first time that such a policy has been carried out by the American nation and it is, therefore, yet a matter to be tried out before anyone can say definitely that the results will be satisfactory. Those who sponsored the legislation have long contended it was both sound and sensible and their argument prevailed in congress.

Advocates of the measure say that it will provide at least a start for the construction of new and faster and more efficient American owned ships. They contend further that the policy upon which the nation has now embarked as regards shipping will cost less in the end than other disguised and concealed subsidies that have been employed.

It may be necessary to recall that the United States long has paid what amounts to a subsidy to ocean going ships in the form of excessive rates for the transportation of ocean mail. There are 43 such mail routes and the ships operating on these routes, consequently, benefited to the extent of the number of pounds of mail they carried because the payments they received were on a pound basis. This contribution from the federal government enabled many of those shipping companies to survive.

But it is only natural that one should ask why a subsidy is advisable or necessary at all. The answer is plain. American owned ships, ships flying the American flag, are required by law to meet numerous conditions that are not required by any other nation of the ships registered with their admiralties.

With these conditions, among many others, it becomes easily understandable what difficulties confront American flag ships in competition with world shipping.

Above and beyond the factors just mentioned, it is a matter of record as well that ship construction in the United States costs more perhaps than any place else in the world. Here again American standards are influential. They bring about higher wages and shorter hours for American labor in American shipyards. Thus, a new ship starting out begins its service with a handicap of greater cost upon which a return must be had if those who invest their money in ships are to receive a profit thereon.

Then, there is a further distinct and important reason. I refer to national defense. It has long been the conviction of military and naval men that American freight and passenger ships should be so designed, developed and constructed, that they might be converted to satisfactory use as auxiliary craft in time of war. In this connection it will be recalled that tremendous sums were expended by our government in building ships for use in the World War. There was such vast waste of money at that time that it seems incredible anyone should ever make the same mistake again. But to avoid that mistake advance preparations are necessary and that is a point strongly stressed by those who favored the ship subsidy legislation.

Now to link the importance of the ship subsidy bill with agriculture: American products must have access to foreign markets and this access must be under fair and reasonable competition conditions. Such reasonable and fair competitive conditions cannot be obtained if American built ships, constructed at greater costs because of the higher standards of wages and living of American labor, and operated on a basis of greater cost for the same reasons do not have some protection from the government whose flag they fly. They cannot, for example, meet the freight rates offered by the Japanese whose labor basis is distressing and whose general construction costs are amazingly low. Nor can they compete with ships constructed with government money and subsidized by special privileges accorded by their governments.

So, it is made to appear, at least from this line of reasoning, that American firms are left to the mercies of foreign shipping companies in their efforts to expand our export trade—that is, they are left to these mercies unless this government takes a definite stand by which American flag ships are accorded some advantages.

I suspect there are many features of the ship subsidy bill which was fathered by Senator Copeland, New York Democrat, that will prove unsatisfactory. Indeed, I am sure some of them will be found to be wholly unworkable. But the point is, after all, that a start has been made toward honesty of policy in dealing with merchant marine problems. I think no one can refute the statement that as between concealed or disguised subsidies and forthright payments that are known as subsidies, the forthright and honest method is decidedly better.

Since the United States normally produces a surplus of agricultural products, it becomes highly important to agriculture that the foreign markets are accessible and that the costs of transportation do not entirely eat up the value of the commodity exported unless the wheat from the plains states and the cotton from the South and the corn from the Mississippi valley can be moved at reasonable cost. It can be moved at reasonable cost only if American shipping is protected. That is not alone my opinion. It is the opinion of many experts in the field.

One might properly inquire why the foreign boats should not be used to handle American commodities if the freight rate is lower. There are two very valid reasons why this should not be obtained. One is that constant rate reduction by foreign shipping companies would sooner or later, probably sooner, destroy the American merchant marine. With this end achieved, the foreign shipping companies would do as they have attempted to do on a number of occasions—jack up the rates to suit themselves. The other reason why American goods should be shipped in American bottoms is that a mercantile marine is as necessary an adjunct to our national economy and our national welfare as are the lines of land transportation. This may seem to me a broad statement but I believe, nevertheless, it is a truthful one because all fields of industry as well as agriculture would suffer if we were left at the mercy of foreign shipping companies. Further, the commodities that we import would pay whatever rates the foreign shipping companies demanded in order to reach our shores and we would pay the bill.

It seems, therefore, that while this legislation probably is far from perfection, probably has entirely too much governmental finger in the shipping pie, presents a start that eventually will be helpful. I have heard no answer to this statement. It is going to cost about so much for transportation on the ocean and if we can maintain an American industry upon that cost plus the aid of a subsidy of the type now initiated, we have laid out a sound unit in our national commercial structure. It goes without saying, therefore, that if it is helpful to one part of the country it is going to be helpful to all others because we are so interrelated.

Political students have been engaged lately in stirring arguments over what possibly may be a new influence in the campaigns of 1936. I refer to the disastrous conditions in some of the plains of the Middle West resulting from lack of rain. I refer, also, to the presence of pests in sections of the plains states.

It has been interesting, not to say humorous, to listen to the arguments being advanced, arguments based purely on political phases that may or may not result from those conditions. There is no agreement among the Democrats and no agreement among the Republicans as to the effect of the natural circumstances developing in the middle west. Some Democrats contend the drought will react to President Roosevelt's advantage. Some Republicans fear that the Democratic contention is true. Some Democrats are afraid that the loss of crops and the generally bad condition in which this leaves thousands of farmers will place them in a state of mind where they will be determined to vote against somebody and of course the only person against whom they can vote is Mr. Roosevelt inasmuch as he happens to be the man in power at the moment.

The village of Spring Bay, on the Illinois river in Woodford county, is preparing to celebrate its centennial this summer. In its early days, Spring Bay was one of the thriving towns downstate, but never had a railroad. Gradually its people moved to Peoria and other nearby cities. With the revival of river traffic and the coming of motor travel, Spring Bay is starting life all over at 100.

Virginia Bonato, 14, of Chicago, died from burns incurred in the explosion of a still in the basement of her home, which cost the life of her mother, Mrs. Lucille Bonato. Another daughter, Lorraine, nine years old, was also seriously burned.

The Willmette board of local improvements, composed of the village president and trustees, recently elected George F. Iliff, secretary, and E. H. Kerr, assistant secretary. Village president Harry C. Kinne is ex-officio president of the board.

Then you begin to find out things for yourself instead of half listening to instructors and skimming through text books.

It is meeting people, talking with them, finding out what they have in their minds that really educates you.

Among these people you will meet with many surprises and perhaps with many disappointments.

But they are the people with whom you must live and work. You must study them and come to understand them. You must bear in mind that few of them are "gaited" as you are; that their ways are new to you, and that their minds work differently.

But you can't bother about that. It is your job to get along with them; to find among them those who will be your friends; to be wary of others who profess friendships that they do not feel, merely for the sake of getting something from you. Trea-

"OOO-OOH!"

By LUCILLE PERKINS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

THE moon, previously so near and huge and warmly yellow, now rode high in chill unfriendliness. The stars were paling and thinning. Dawn, if the grayness to the east were indeed dawn, was coming without color or cheer. Wet mist blanketed the lake.

Faintly and from far away came the beat of a gasoline engine such as might perhaps be chugging some heavy-eyed fisherman to his early morning anchorage.

As if roused by the sound, Priscilla Parker stirred, shivered slightly and snuggled—yes, undeniably snuggled—closer into the embrace of the boy who sat beside her on the sagging wharf.

"You're a reckless, obstinate, big brute, Barry Bates," she sighed. "But I guess I've got to love you just the same."

Barry Bennington Bates, III., felt his aching backbone thrill pleasantly. He tightened his clasp of Priscilla's dew-dampened but warmly vibrant form. He hoped his gesture was masterful, though the numbness of his arm was such that he feared he was merely awkward. With his free hand he adjusted the inadequate flannel jacket which was wrapped about the girl's slim shoulders.

"You're doggone right you've got to love me," he boomed sternly. "And you're finding it out just about in time."

"Ooh, Barry, you sound so cross." Priscilla snuggled again. "Suppose I refused to admit that I like you, even a little bit?"

"You'd stay right here on this island until you changed your mind." "Ooh, Barry, you old kidnaper. Kiss me."

"But, Barry," Priscilla took up the conversation some minutes later, "weren't you afraid I'd hate you for keeping me out like this?"

"Might as well have you hating me as have you just ignoring me. With the crowd that is always hanging 'round you ashore, what chance did I have to get a word in edgewise for myself?"

"Well, you certainly have stated your case these last eight hours. Imagine us sitting on this wharf since nine o'clock last night."

"Seems like eight minutes," said Barry, gallantly giving the lie to the agonizing protest of every muscle of his cramped frame.

"Ooh, Barry," applauded Priscilla. She never bothered with dictionary words when a throaty little coo would express her sentiments adequately. Young Mr. Bates adored her naivete.

For another few minutes there was no conversation. Then—"But, Barry—"

"Yes."

"Did you plan it all, every bit of it? Pushing off the canoe and everything?" Just for a split second, Barry hesitated. Then he swallowed hard and spoke boldly.

"Sure, I did. I had to do something to get you alone."

"Oo-ooh, Barry." An "ooh" to put heart in a man. Barry pressed his advantage.

"Say, Cilla, what did you think when you saw our ferry boat drifting away?"

"Just at first," she whispered, "I didn't know what we'd do. Then—"

"Then what?" The chest of Barry Bennington Bates, III., strained at the coat buttons which confined it.

"Then you were so fierce, Barry, darling. You said YES the darned canoe was gone. What about it? You said you'd shoved it off yourself. BRRR! You growled at me. You said you guessed it was high time you had me where I'd have to take you seriously. You said I'd have to stay right here until I told you that I—that I—loved you. Oo-ooh-ooh, Barry. Don't be such a bear."

"And were you scared?"

"No. 'Cause then I knew I did."

"Did what?"

"Loved you, you brute. Ooh, Barry."

"A cuddly, cosy little 'ooh' this last."

The moon was now no longer visible. The grayness in the East was shot with orange and rose. The sky was baby blue with tiny wisps of white cloud. The mist was lifting.

The throbbing motor boat engine was much nearer.

"Are you going to take me home now, Barry?"

"Yes. Just as soon as I can hail a boat. There'll be plenty passing."

"Ooh, Barry, you think of everything."

"I'm thinking just at present of what your mother will say when you get back to the camp." Barry's voice had lost something of its heartiness.

"She won't know where I've been." Priscilla was reassuringly practical. "She expected me to be visiting down the lake last night—at the Stowbridges. I was to motor there after the dance."

"Of course," Barry was himself again. "I remember. I counted on that."

"Ooh, Barry. You old schemer."

"I believe that boat is coming in here," Barry announced. "Let's get ready to yell."

"You yell. I've got to powder my nose." Priscilla shook her bedraggled frock into some semblance of order. She produced a minute vanity case. "You turn the other way while I get prettied up."

By the time the motor boat was easing in at the wharf tip, Priscilla was as presentable as she was self-possessed. Barry, none too romantic a figure in his greased flannels and damp sweater, handed her aboard the rescue craft.

"Lost our canoe," he told the man at the wheel shortly. "Be much obliged if you take us to the mainland."

"To the Parker cottage."

"Yes. How'd you know?"

"Oh—er—I recognized Miss Priscilla."

"It's Joe Travers. He used to work for father," whispered Priscilla, beckoning Barry to a seat by her side at the boat's bow. "Isn't it lucky he happened by?"

"Well, somebody would have been sure to come along. I've got to leave you soon, 'Cilla."

"Ooh, Barry." A plaintive "ooh."

"Yes, and I think I ought to tell you something."

"What is it, Barry?"

"Tell me first if you're sure you love me."

"Oo-ooh-ooh, Barry." An adequate "ooh."

"And nothing would change you?"

"Of course not, silly."

"Not even if I'd done something that—a gentleman shouldn't?"

"Ooh, Barry. Are you worrying about pushing off that old canoe last night. I'm glad you did."

"But that's just it. I didn't."

"Ooh, Barry." A queer inflection to this "ooh."

"No, the blamed thing must have got loose by itself. I didn't know it was gone until I heard you scream."

"But you said—"

"I said I'd done it to get you alone. I know. But I wanted you to think I was a cave man. I thought you'd never take me seriously until I could impress you somehow."

"Ooh, Barry, you funny darling."

"Then you aren't disgusted with me?"

"Oo - OOOOH, Barry." Quite breathlessly. "Stop it, bad boy. Joe Travers is looking."

"What of it? We'll announce our engagement at dinner tonight. Look, we're almost at your cottage. Want to drop me here at the landing this side? No use giving your mother's cook an opportunity to go gossiping all around the lake."

Joe Travers, in obedience to request, pulled inshore. As he fended the boat off the wharf, Joe's back was turned.

"Ooo-Ooo-ooh, Barry."

"Bye, 'Cilla angel—until this afternoon." Barry halted with his foot on the gunwale. "Wasn't it marvelous luck?"

"What, Barry?"

"Losing that darned canoe. Not luck, either. It was fate. That's what it was."

"Fate. Just think, Barry. Good-by, darling, 'til this after."

Joe Travers, the imperturbable, shoved off and started his engine again.

Priscilla watched the tall but boyish figure of Harry Bennington Bates, III., stride out of sight.

"Got a cigaret, Joe?" she inquired of the man at the wheel.

"In the locker there, Miss Priscilla. Same as always. You'd better hop ashore now and get to bed. You'll catch your death of cold and your pa will skin me if he ever finds this business out."

"He won't. He isn't home. No thanks to you, though. I thought you'd never show up at the island."

"I was only an hour later than you told me. Don't forget I had to chase that canoe of yours. She'd drifted clean to the narrows."

"Sorry, Joe."

"It wasn't necessary to give it such a shove, Miss Priscilla. If it had just been cut loose, it would have been along the lower shore of the island somewhere."

"Well, Joe, I'll tell you." Priscilla grinned elfishly. "I didn't dare take half-way measures. If I hadn't pushed the thing most across the lake, Barry Bates would have gone swimming after it. He's a reckless, obstinate, big brute, if I do love him."

Joe shifted his chew and spat reflectively.

"I guess he'll get tamed fast enough, Miss Priscilla, now you've got him in hand."

"O-ooh, Joe!" reproved Priscilla demurely.

Famous Favre Glass

Production Held Lost

Favre glass, originated by the late Louis Comforth Tiffany, has not been made for over six years, says the American Collector.

Starting in 1883, Tiffany established a glass blowing enterprise at Corona, N. Y., at which he endeavored to match the color of the old Greek and Roman glass that had become iridescent from being buried for centuries. He gathered a group of expert glass workers, largely from Starbridge, England. At first his undertaking was called the Starbridge Glass company; later the designation was changed to Tiffany Favre Glass but from the first each piece was signed.

Finally Tiffany bought back the stock held by the others and closed the works. All of the formulae that had been developed for that particular iridescent glass that had come to be known as Tiffany glass, were destroyed under Mr. Tiffany's personal supervision. That was several years ago. Three years later, at the age of eighty-four, he died. Since then some of the men who worked in the Tiffany glass house have tried to produce glass of the same type independently.

Lesson for July 26

CHRISTIANITY SPREAD BY PERSECUTION

LESSON TEXT—Acts 7:58-8:4; 1 Peter 4:12-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.—Revelation 2:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Man Who Was Not Afraid.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Stephen the Unafraid. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Persecution. Then and Now. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Modern Forms of Persecution.

Leaders of contemporary thought and observers of modern life decry the evident decadence of old-fashioned virtues. Our times are too materialistic, encouraging young people to strive for worldly success rather than high and noble character.

In a time when expediency is the ruling principle, it is well for Christians to emphasize the fact that following Christ has through all the years called for that loyalty to convictions which has caused some who bear his name to be willing to die for him, yea, even to live and to suffer for him, for sometimes it may be harder to do the latter than the former. True followers of our Lord are willing.

I. To Die for the Faith (7:54-8:1).

Stephen, one of the first seven chosen as deacons of the church, "a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit" (6:5), having been called before the Sanhedrin to answer false charges (6:8-15), faithfully stands for the truth. His indictment of Israel cuts to the heart. In anger his hearers stone him to death. He becomes the first martyr of the Church, that holy succession which has representatives in the young manhood and womanhood of today, ready, like John and Betty Stam, to die rather than to deny Christ.

Note that in this hour Stephen was given a vision of his risen and ascended Lord (v. 55), standing at the right hand of God to welcome his faithful servant. He prayed for those who took his life (v. 60). How gloriously that prayer was answered in the subsequent life of the young man Saul, who was "consenting unto his death."

Not to all who follow Christ comes the need to face death for him, but all should be determined.

II. To Live for the Faith (8:2-4).

The early Church found that living for Christ entailed bitter persecution. Not even the sanctity of their homes was inviolate. Their persons and property felt the hard hand of havoc-making Saul, yet we find no intimation of complaint.

Soon they were driven from home and scattered abroad, but the result was the establishing of gospel centers wherever they went. Living for Christ calls for daily witness, for more than steadily bearing the responsibility of life. Not to preachers and Bible teachers alone is this sacred duty given, to be discharged only in a church service or Bible school. No, "they that were scattered abroad"—all of them went "everywhere." They were not merely reforming or devoting their lives to social service, good as these might have been, but "preaching the word" (v. 4).

Are we who are now "scattered abroad" going "everywhere," and are we "preaching the word?"

III. To Suffer for the Faith (1 Pet. 4:12-19).

1. We are not to be surprised by suffering (v. 12), not even by fiery trials, for blessings will follow. The Lord proves his children, even as the refiner tests gold to cleanse it, to prove its worth, and not to destroy it. God's testings are to prove us worthy.

2. We are so to live as not to suffer for our misdeeds (vv. 15, 16). Many are they who would have the world believe they suffer for Christ's sake when they are but meeting the just recompense for their evil deeds. It is a shame to suffer as an evildoer, but an honor and privilege to suffer for Jesus' sake.

3. Believers are to make their sufferings a testimony (vv. 17-19). If we as Christians must needs be purged in order to be fitted for God's service and the glory that is to come, what will be the end of those who "know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (II Thess. 1:7, 8)? Peter refrains from even mentioning what their ultimate end will be, but the writer to the Thessalonians goes on to say that they shall be "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." Solemn words are these. Have we, and those to whom we minister, heeded their warning?

Real Character of Man

It is the relaxation of security; it is in the expansion of prosperity; it is in the hour of dilation of the heart, and of its softening into festivity and pleasure, that the real character of men is discerned.—Burke.

Our Friendships

How few are there born with souls capable of friendship. Then how much fewer must there be capable of love, for love includes friendship and much more besides!

Pinafore for Little Girl

The clever cutting of this useful pinafore is shown in the small diagram beside the little girl. You will see at once that this frock requires no sewing and of course the feature which so greatly intrigues children is the butterfly which forms the pocket.

Notice how simple it is to put on, merely slipped over the head and tied at each side. Mothers find it a great help because it can be used as an apron over a frock, which must be kept clean, or worn instead of a frock. The panties to match are an asset—they have the comfortable French yoke top and stay snug but never bind. This attractive design made in cotton, percale, gingham, calico, or lawn would be effective with contrasting binding and colorful embroidery on the butterfly pocket.

Barbara Bell Pattern. No. 1910-B is available for sizes 2, 4, 6, and 8. Size 6 requires 1 1/2 yards of 35 inch material plus 7-8 yard for the panties. Send fifteen cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents for your copy.

Our Army of "Dependents"

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

As millions of Americans struggle with their latest tax forms, they are beginning to realize that there is a large group of "dependents" for whose upkeep they are allowed no exemptions whatever.

It is the growing army of political job-holders—every member of which is dependent for his pay-check on the earnings of the average American citizen and taxpayer.

But the burden doesn't rest on the income taxpayer alone. With other costs of government, it falls on every worker, every housewife, who either earns or spends—if not directly then in taxes hidden somewhere in the price of nearly everything he or she may buy.

And the costs continue to mount. That's why we hear protests to Congress against taxes on "the American breakfast table and the forgotten man's shirt."

That's why a noted political observer could recently declare that the American people are spending more for government than they are for food, clothing and rent combined.

That's why statisticians can make the startling announcement that the annual total of federal, state and local government expenditures in America averages $517 per family.

Throughout the nation, it is now apparent, the taxpayers themselves are coming to a grim realization of what these things mean to them. And, what is more significant, they are making their protests heard.

It's a good sign—if we don't weaken.

3-Base Hits—Blaney.
Home Runs—Klepper, 1.
Winning Pitcher—Kramer.
Losing Pitcher—Sheehan.

Millard Klepper who made his first appearance in a uniform this season, covered left field in grand style, and after looking over the pitching of Oak Forest for several innings, picked one that suited him and drove the ball over the center-fielders head for his only hit, a home run. Klepper will be at the Midlothian game and will gladly autograph your score card.

Sunday, July 26th the Tinley Park base ball team will play the Midlothian Bears at Tinley Park diamond. This should be a close battle as the teams are pretty evenly matched and are tied for second place in the league standings. Tinley lost the first game to the Bears by a score of 5 to 4 in 13 innings and this game should prove who has the better team. Game starts at 3 p. m.

Tinley Park Garden Club

The Tinley Park Garden club held their meeting at "Idlewild" home of Mrs. Wallace B. Combs on Thursday July 16th.

In spite of the fact that quite a few members are gone on vacations and the extremely hot weather, there were about sixteen members who gathered on the lovely sun porch where the hostess awaited them with some ice cold fruit-ade.

The business meeting took up the greater part of the afternoon. For the social part the ladies donned hats which they had fixed up, and there were some startling creations to greet the eye. Gorgeous ones with plumes, others with flowers and butterflies, ribbons, etc. Mrs. Swisher took first prize for the most original. The hostess served delicious orange ice and cookies when the meeting adjourned.

On Tuesday, July 21st a farewell luncheon was held at the home of Mrs. Brueggeman in honor of Mrs. Hug, who will make her home in Chicago in the near future. The members sat down to a beautifully decorated table at 10 o'clock. A beautiful center-piece of purple sweet peas with green foliage graced the table, the place cards being in the same colors. Mrs. Hug was presented with a plaque after the luncheon as a little gift in appreciation of her work in the Garden club. Later in the afternoon a shower was given in honor of Mrs. Alice Anderson. She received many beautiful gifts. Many thanks to the committee, Mrs. Brueggeman, Mrs. Clara Goessel and Mrs. Klepper, also to Mrs. Swisher for the pretty place cards.

Mrs. Koehler, Guild chairman, reports the following donors of flowers for the week: Mesdames Henry Beckstein, Baldwin, Glogwartz, and Koehler.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Harry Mager on Thursday, August 20.

and in programs which demand expansion of their territories. Unless the United States maintains an adequate national defense, in keeping with the territory and shores we must guard, our possessions would constitute a temptation for some nation more powerfully armed than we.

Our organization is determined to support every possible means of enforcing permanent peace for the United States of America. We are convinced that an adequate national defense is one of the first requirements to achieving that peace. In all of the major conflicts in which this nation has been involved, we were unprepared. Had we been adequately armed and had our forces been adequately trained and equipped, we would have been able to bring those wars to a much earlier conclusion at a tremendous saving in lives and in money.

Paul L. Hastings, Minister
Church School—10 a. m.
Morning Worship—11 a. m.

It is quite evident that parents and children like to worship together. At least that was indicated by the vote last Sunday that our joint church and church school worship service should be continued for another week.

We shall therefore again have our service of worship at 10:30 Sunday morning. The minister will be assisted by boys and girls from the church school. This service will be dismissed at 11:15, and will be followed by a sermon discussion for adults, which will be concluded not later than 11:50. We shall be looking for your whole family promptly at 10:30.

You are reminded once more of our last quarterly conference of the church year, to be held at the church at 7:30 Saturday evening of this week. Dr. R. M. Pierce, our district superintendent, will be with us for this occasion. Reports will be presented from the various departments of the church, and plans considered for future activities. The membership of the church is urged to be present at this meeting. We shall be glad to have our friends who worship with us share this evening so that they may get better acquainted with the whole work of our church.

Plans are being considered for holding a ping-pong and dart ball tournament for the boys of the community some Saturday in the near future. Would you be interested, fellows? Just say the word, and probably something can be done about it.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Life" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, July 19.

The Golden Text was, "This is Life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou has sent" (John 17:8).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "In the way of righteousness is life; and in the pathway thereof there is no death" (Prov. 12:28).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Ignorance of God is no longer the stepping-stone to faith. The only guarantee of obedience is a right apprehension of Him whom to know aright is Life eternal" (Prof. VII).

HOMER

Mrs. Fred Kopelman

The Lockport Fire Department responded to two calls in Homer Tuesday when a fire of unknown origin swept over several hundred acres of land in the eastern part of Homer. A large building on 159th street, east of Oswald's Grove was completely destroyed but fortunately it was unoccupied. The fire then swept southward and burned the Old Log Cabin and several small buildings on the Oscar Bump farm.

A group of Homer Congregational church young people attended services in the Presbyterian church in Dupage Sunday evening. Those attending from here were: Lois Ott, Evelyn Kopelman, Margaret and Elise Welter, Betty Hartman, Isabel Anderson, Jerome Paddock, Frank Hartman, Earl Kopelman, Elwyn Cagwin, Norman White, Bruce Anderson and Owen Storm.

Donald O'Leary and Joyce Purdy spent a portion of the past week in Peoria. Little Eugene Piggott has been ill with chicken pox. Miss Blanche Dale is in Seneca caring for her grandmother, Mrs. Canuteson, who recently fell and broke her hip.

There will be no meeting of the Wayside Workers' Circle of the King's Daughters Society during July. The August meeting will be held in the home of Mrs. Ira Anderson.

Mr. and Mrs. John Guildenzoph & son, John Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kopelman and family, Mr. and Mrs. Merritt Cagwin and family and Leon and Anderson enjoyed a weiner roast in the Messenger Forest Preserve Thursday evening.

Leonard Heusing returned Sunday from a motor trip to Pittsburg, Pa. "Here Comes Charlie", a farce comedy in three acts is the play to be presented by the Homer Dramatic Club next month. The first practice was held Tuesday night with Robert

Pigmy Elephants With Huge Circus

Mighty Ringling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey Combined Organizations Offer Among Vast Hosts Of New Features Col. Tim McCoy, Screen's Great Western Star, Midget African Elephants and Pongurs.

With one hundred double-length railroad cars, bearing 1600 people, African pigmy elephants, African pongurs, seven herds of full-sized elephants, 1009 menagerie animals and 700 horses, the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined circus will be shown in Chicago, under canvas in Soldier Field, for nine days beginning Saturday Afternoon July 25th for afternoon and night exhibitions.

The circus is especially elated this season over the amazing success of the Big Show's sensational new super-feature—the first herd of African pigmy elephants (tiny tusked that years ago attained their full growth) ever to leave the depths of darkest Africa, and the first herd of African elephants ever to set feet in America. The weird midget pachyderms are accompanied by a herd of miniature African pongurs, world's smallest beasts of burden. These new importations have taken America by storm.

The Big Show's big top, seating 16,000 persons, covers seven rings and stages a huge hippodrome track and encircling grandstands, and is one of 31 great tents, among them the menagerie sheltering the world's largest traveling zoo. In its center this season will be seen Col. Tim McCoy's Indian Village, with Sioux and Blackfoot warriors encamped. Col. McCoy, the screen's most outstanding western star, will himself lead his congress of rough riders of the world in the main performances and in the wild west.

The Greatest Show on Earth offers scores of foreign features this year, including the Naitos, the Royal Bokaras, the Imperial Viennese, an assemblage of 60 free-running horses, ponies and elephants; the largest aerial ballet ever produced. It is called Alka-Seltzer because it makes a sparkling alkaline drink, and as it contains an analgesic (Acetyl-Salicylate) it first relieves the pain of everyday ailments and then by restoring the alkaline balance corrects the cause when due to excess acid.

After trying many brands of medicines—so-called relief for gas, and all of them a failure, I gave up hopes. By chance I tried Alka-Seltzer—I am more than satisfied. Geo. Barnett, New York, N. Y.

Plant More Trees

I complained because I had no shoes—until I saw a man who had no feet. —A Sunshine Saying.

Will B. Otwell of Carlinville, Ill., wants ten million people to read this little sermon and is willing to send copies of it free to anyone desiring same.

Mr. Otwell, founder of the Otwell Tree Planting Club of America says: "I took a trip of one hundred miles to count the forest trees that had been cut down in the past year. I counted five hundred and stopped. Then I counted the new trees that had been planted in the past year and I could not find a one."

"Are these hot, dry winds to teach us nothing? Are these ever increasing dust storms to go unheeded until our fertile lands shall become one corner of the Sahara Desert?"

If we don't do it otherwise, isn't it about time that we have a law to compel us to plant one-tenth of our lands in trees? The process is a long one. Isn't it time we should first to begin to get ready to tackle the job?

The Otwell Tree Planting Club of America planted a million trees the past year but that isn't a drop in the bucket. We must plant the idea first—the balance will follow swiftly."

OBITUARY

August Carl Krebs was born of Lutheran Christian parents in Mitweida, Saxony, Germany, on January 30, 1862. Soon after his birth he was consecrated to the Lord in the rite of Holy Baptism. After due instruction he also made his Confirmation vows there. He received his elementary school education in the schools of Mitweida.

Among several reasons for his leaving his native land and coming to America to prepare for the holy ministry was paramount the example and influence of his uncle, the Rev. A. Krebs, who served as one of the pioneer pastors in America and also served as missionary among the American Indians.

He matriculated at the Wartburg Seminary of the Ev. Luth. Synod of Iowa and other States located at Mendota, Ill., in 1880. He was prematurely graduated from the seminary in the fall of 1882 to take up the charge of Tinley Park, Ill. The Dr. Gottfried Fritschel ordained him to the holy ministry and also installed him in his congregation at Tinley Park.

Here, on May 1, 1884, he was united in holy wedlock with Anna Irmischer, who had come from Mitweida, Germany, for the occasion. The Dr. Gottfried Fritschel officiated at this service. This union was blessed with four sons. One son, William, preceded his father into eternity in 1933.

After serving the Tinley Park congregation for about ten years he accepted a call to Shumway, Ill., where he labored in the Lord's vineyard for about twelve years. In 1905 he began his sixteen year ministry in Schwer, near Milford, Ill. In the fall of 1921 he moved to Knowles, Wis., where he served until his retirement from the active ministry in 1925.

Upon retirement he and his wife made their home in Clinton, Iowa. Sorrow came to them when in 1926 his life's partner was touched by a paralytic stroke which made her a helpless invalid causing him much worry and concern.

A second hour of grief came when the oldest son, the Rev. William Krebs, of Rock Falls, Ill., passed to his eternal reward in 1933, in the prime of life and labor.

Two years ago he had to submit to a major operation, which proved very successful. Nevertheless advancing years and a hidden ailment brought on such physical weakness as to necessitate their leaving their home in Clinton and moving to the home of their son in Plainfield about a year ago. Here his physical weakness was stayed for a short time. But soon internal complications again took his strength from him. Last Wednesday he suffered some intense pain. It was not alarming. But on Friday, July 10, he was rushed to the hospital in Joliet for an emergency operation, but before the operation could be performed he grew weak, fell into a coma, and passed away a few hours later, at 6:50 p. m. He attained the age of 74 years, 5 months and 10 days. He is survived by his widow, Anna Krebs, three sons, Edmund and Rudolf of Plainfield, and Louis of Davenport, Iowa; by eight grandchildren and a host of friends.

Oat Harvest Yield Is Not So Bad

The oat harvest is on and reports show that the oat yield is not quite as poor as was at first estimated. The oats threshed have run from 20, 25 to 30 bushels per acre, much depending on the condition of the soil to produce the various yields. The corn crop has been somewhat benefited by a few light rains and cool nights and the prospects are that the crop will produce an average yield after all.

REPORTER-PHOTOGRAPHERS, hundreds of them, constantly scour the world for "shots" that will make a news highlight more real . . . more interesting . . . more understandable. The single, business-like click of a camera and a thousand-word story is captured, all in an instant, to be presented in a manner more graphic than the words themselves could ever attain.

The scenes these men photograph number into the thousands daily. From this great number a careful selection is made. The chosen pictures, designed to aid you in the visualization of important news events or "human-interest" occurrences and individuals, are regularly offered by this newspaper.

This is our answer to a modern public's demand upon a modern newspaper for pictures of places, persons and incidents of world-wide interest.

He wiped his glasses, and went on. "I'd written a cable ordering your arrest. There didn't seem much sense in sending it. I was stuck in Bad Nauheim. My son was locked up in the Tombs. You seemed bent on getting him out. It was a chance. I telegraphed Harwood to give you every possible aid. I told him to raise your salary, and I signed a check for my wife to send you. She didn't know that you weren't her boy, and she didn't know I knew anything. Nobody knew. I kept my mouth shut, and the wires busy.

"Two weeks ago, I learned that you'd accomplished nothing and that the date of the trial was set. I went to my doctor, and he said I could make the trip. After I'd booked passage Harwood cabled about the Morano clew. Then I told my wife everything, and came home."

"To deal with me?"

"Yes."

Apparently that was all. Ridder made his statement, coldly, calmly, as a judge might have spoken in charging a jury. The charge over, he waited again—so long that the pause became unendurable. Barry was standing—like a prisoner in the dock. After a moment, he said: "What are you going to do?"

"Listen to your explanation."

"I haven't any."

"There's a police officer in the next room."

"Yes," Barry answered. "I felt sure there would be."

"Is there any reason I shouldn't turn you over to him?"

"None that you don't know about."

He was as cold and as calm as Ridder. Two cold, calm men, looking at each other. Ridder knew everything. He knew what Barry had done for his son, and had a police officer in the next room. "Knowing everything, he waited until Barry could be of no further use and then sent for 'the cops.' A hard man and a mean one. That was that."

"I'm not going to beg off, if that's what you want," Barry blurted. "You know what I did—"

"I want to know why you did it."

"I don't know myself."

"No?"

"No."

"I think I do know," Ridder said. His glasses were still in his hand, and he was scrutinizing Barry through naked, narrow eyes. "Half a dozen people have been here to plead for you. One of 'em's still here. To listen to them, anybody'd suppose you broke into my house to do me a good turn. You didn't exactly do that, did you?"

"No," Barry answered. "I didn't."

"The obvious thing seems to be that you broke in to help yourself. The servants arrived and mistook you for my son. That enabled you to stay on. Then my son's wife appeared. You silenced her by undertaking to get the boy off. That's the story, isn't it?"

"Pretty nearly."

"And then you remained to face me because you thought you could bluff your way out. That was the game, wasn't it? Blackmail?"

Barry was getting angry. It was unbearable; this hard, mean old man twisting his motives, incapable of admitting that a single one of them might have been honest. Why should he remain silent? He was in for it, anyway.

"As a matter of fact," he found himself saying, "that isn't my game. The story you told isn't my story. It's merely what happened, with all the truth left out of it."

"Then why don't you tell me the truth?"

"You wouldn't believe me. You couldn't, because you couldn't understand. I broke into your house because I was cold, and wet, and hungry. I stayed, at first, because I was nuts about a girl, and wanted to be near her. Then Peggy came—she's your daughter-in-law, you know—and told me her story. I was sorry for her. Terribly sorry. But, of course, you don't believe that."

"Why not?"

"Because you knew the story, too. You had 'em trailed all about Florida. You knew the fight he'd made, and she'd made for him, and you didn't give a damn. I haven't got a friend in the world," she said. "Just a sick kid, and a husband I'm strong for shut up in the Tombs. That's why I stayed on in your house, using your name, to help her. At least, I think it is. You don't. You couldn't. You never felt sorry for anybody. You've got the truth now—the whole truth. Send for your cop, and let's have it over."

The old man sat watching him. And then, suddenly, he thrust forward the paper he'd been reading when Barry entered.

"How do you explain that?" he asked.

"What is it?"

"The wireless you sent my wife two days after you broke into my house. To make her think that you were her son. When you wrote that, you'd never seen Peggy. You didn't know you could help anybody. You were perpetrating a cruel hoax to stay on in my house, and feather your nest. Is that true, or isn't it?"

"It isn't."

"Then why did you send that message?"

Barry didn't answer.

How could one answer—to that hard, mean old man—"I sent it because I never had a mother, and liked pretending that I had?" How could one say, "I felt sorry for her, too. I wanted her to believe that her boy loved her?" One simply couldn't, and so Barry remained silent.

The old man was waiting. "Go on," Barry said. "Get your cop."

"If I have you arrested, the cat's out of the bag."

"I don't get you."

"Every one's going to know that the man in my house wasn't my son—that my son was in the Tombs."

Barry's eyes flashed. "You would think of that. Well, go ahead; ring. My mouth's shut, too. I did this to give those two kids a break. I'm not likely to spoil it now, am I? Go on, ring, and let's have it over."

The old man's hand descended upon the button.

Then the big door opened, and a secretary entered.

He glanced at Barry, and whispered to Ridder.

"All right. We're finished."

The secretary glanced at Barry again and left the room.

With cold, calm eyes, Ridder indicated the door behind him.

"In there," he said, rising and walking away.

Barry looked after him. "Tough guy," Barry muttered quite audibly, quoting Peggy. His hand was on the knob now. "Tough guy—that bird."

Then he braced himself and opened the door.

It was dark in the next room. Quite dark, after the dazzling sunlight of Ridder's office.

Barry closed the door behind him and stood trying to accustom himself to the new dimness.

There was only one window here, and that heavily curtained. No way in or out, except that by which Barry had come. A smallish board room, this was, for staff meetings. Barry made out a long table, with chairs about it, and several file cabinets. Beside these, some one was waiting.

The "cop"?

Before Barry could answer his own question, the figure turned and came forward.

Patricia.

Patricia Hambridge, in a blue tailored ensemble.

Barry laughed.

"Pat!" he exclaimed. "I thought you were a policeman."

"No," she replied, grimly. "There's one outside, though. My father warned me about Mr. Ridder but I didn't think anybody could be as—as granite as that old man."

"You're tellin' me?" Barry grinned.

"We've been at him ever since he arrived—his son, Peggy, father and I. Peter Winslow, his own wife. We didn't expect friendship to count—not after the way his paper went after father. But we talked reason. Peter, with his wife sick at home—Peter said you couldn't've worked harder for your brother."

"What was Ridder's answer to that?"

"He had to. This girl—meaning Peggy—this girl wouldn't've kept her mouth shut if she hadn't thought he was her own chance."

"Yes," Peter argued, "but he was really working."

"He was getting a good salary for doing it. And good clothes, and a good home, and servants he wasn't paying for. I'd've worked in his place."

"So my mother pleaded, too," Barry reminded himself, swiftly, with curious satisfaction. Then he grinned again at having thought of that old man's wife as his mother.

"I'd like to meet Mrs. Ridder," he said aloud. "I'd like to thank her and Winslow, of course, and all of you."

"It didn't do much good," Pat responded. "But Peter's going to take your case, and fight to a finish. He says he'll stay home from Europe, if necessary."

"I don't want to fight," Barry answered. "I'm not exactly eager to go to jail, but it looks as though I was booked for it. And I don't want to make any rumpus. That would only hurt Jack and Peggy. I want to wipe all this off the slate, and start fresh."

Pat nodded.

"I know. You kept saying, 'Let's have it over.'"

"You heard?"

"Of course, I listened shamelessly."

"Did it matter so much to you?" Barry asked.

And then was sorry he'd said it. "We've all been long on eavesdropping," he added, quickly. "Old Ridder, your father—"

"We've all had good reason."

She was standing beside the long table.

"You asked if it mattered to me," she said. "Don't you know?"

"Why should it matter?"

"Don't you know that?"

"We've been good pals—" he began. She was staring at him fixedly.

"Don't talk nonsense," she commanded.

Barry sat next to her.

"Listen," he said. "You're a lady—" She laid her hand on his arm.

"I've only one question to ask," she declared, "and I count on your answering that honestly."

"You can."

"You said—to Ridder—I stayed, at first, because I was nuts about a girl."

"Yes."

"Was that true?"

"Yes."

"Who was she?"

"I told you a month ago."

"Under considerable stress. And you never repeated it. Are you still nuts about her?"

She used the absurd colloquialism as gravely as though it were Shakespearean English.

An invisible hand clutched at Barry's throat.

There was a lump there—something that had to be swallowed immediately. He felt an hysterical desire to laugh, or to cry. Then, "We won't talk about that now," he said, calmly.

"Why not?"

He couldn't answer.

"Was that pretense, too?"

Suddenly, he couldn't bear it.

"You know damned well it wasn't," he burst forth, inexcusably. "You know exactly how I feel. You've always known. Everybody's always known everything about me, it seems. I'm as much a failure at faking as I am at everything else. What's the sense of discussing it now?"

"This may be our last chance to discuss it."

They were both standing. Looking straight at each other.

Then, Pat said, "I love you."

"For God's sake—listen—I'm the son of a ne'er-do-well."

"I love you."

"I'm a bum and a vagabond."

"I love you."

"Before night, I'll be a jail-bird."

"I love you."

"Pat—"

"I'll wait for you," Pat said. "And then we'll both start fresh."

She was smiling now.

"Will you marry me, Mr. Gilbert?" For answer, he caught her up in his arms.

He was still holding her when the old man came through the door.

"Will you step in here, please?" the old man asked, as unemotionally as though he had seen people embracing one another in this board room every day of his life.

Without replying, Barry released Pat.

Then he pressed her shoulder, reassuringly, and followed Ridder.

At the big desk, Mrs. Ridder was standing. He recognized her at once, though she was younger—and prettier—than he had expected. "Forty," Barry guessed, glancing at her wavy, dark hair, and then realized that she must be more than that. She looked very much like her son, Barry thought. Curious. That was the stronger strain, then, even though she seemed as soft and gentle as her husband was hard and domineering.

She was a small woman, with plump arms, and tiny wrists and ankles. She had large, brown eyes, with shadows under them. They had shown suffering, those eyes, though they were bright enough now. "Snappy," Barry described them.

"My wife," Ridder nodded toward her, curtly.

She came forward, her hand extended to Barry.

"I want to thank you," she said, quietly.

Before Barry could answer, Ridder asked, "Why didn't you tell me you'd left all this at Southampton?"

"All what?"

"Your accounts," Mrs. Ridder explained. "Evans gave them to me this morning, but I didn't open the envelope until just now. Then I brought it straight to Mr. Ridder."

"What's this mummery about paying your board? . . . Come in, Miss Hambridge."

Washington Inspected Steamboat

On September 7, 1784, George Washington, in a certificate stating that he had inspected James Rumsey's steamboat model, wrote, in part: "I . . . do give it as my opinion . . . that the discovery is of vast importance—may be of greatest usefulness in our inland waters." Rumsey's idea of propelling his craft by forcibly ejecting a stream of water from its stern never proved practical. Fulton and others were to bring Washington's optimistic prediction to fulfillment. The incident demonstrates, however, that as early as 150 years ago, a few far-sighted men like Washington clearly saw the importance of taking advantage of all possible means of improving communication between the widely separated sections of the new American republic.

"The Man Who-o-o"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History
BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

DRAFTED

FROM time to time there has been talk of "drafting" some candidate. However, there have been only two instances in our political history when a man was given the nomination against his will and in both cases the drafted candidate was defeated in the election.

In 1868 one of the issues raised by the Democrats was a demand for the payment of the war debt in paper money issued for this purpose. Its chief advocate was George H. Pendleton of Cincinnati and the appeal of the "Ohio Idea" was so great that he was the logical candidate for the nomination.

But Horatio Seymour, the Civil war governor of New York, was opposed to both the "Ohio Idea" and the candidacy of its chief supporter. As chairman of the convention he was able to prevent Pendleton's nomination but he could not keep the inflation plank out of the platform.

After many ballots and some confusion it turned to Seymour and, although he shouted from the platform "Your candidate I can not be!" the delegates went right ahead and nominated him.

Although Seymour polled 2,709,213 popular votes to 3,015,071 for Gen. U. S. Grant, the Republican nominee, and carried eight states, the electoral vote stood 214 for Grant and 80 for Seymour. This defeat ended his political career for he considered his acceptance of an unwanted nomination as the greatest mistake of his life and would never again consider running for any office.

Four years later a peculiar political situation resulted in another case of "drafting." A faction of the Republican party, dissatisfied with the Grant administration and his renomination, held another convention in Cincinnati and chose Horace Greeley for President and B. Gratz Brown of Missouri for vice-president. When the Democrats met in Baltimore they decided that a fusion ticket might defeat Grant so they also nominated Greeley and Brown.

But this action offended the "old line" Democrats so they held a convention in Louisville, Ky. For President they selected Charles O'Connor, a distinguished New York lawyer who had won the deep affection of the South by his efforts to secure the release of Jefferson Davis from prison at Fortress Monroe and to defend him against the charge of treason. O'Connor was nominated on the first ballot by a vote of 600 to four and for their vice-president they named John Quincy Adams of Massachusetts.

Immediately after the balloting O'Connor was notified by telegraph of his nomination and at once declined to accept it. The convention was thrown into disorder and an attempt was made to give the honor to the permanent chairman, James Lyons of Virginia, but he refused. So the convention adopted a resolution reiterating the selection of O'Connor and Adams and immediately adjourned. In the election which followed O'Connor and Adams received 29,489 votes scattered through 23 states. This was not an impressive showing but the "Greeleyites" did little better and the 29,000 had the satisfaction of knowing that they had been true to a plank in their platform which read, "We welcome an eternal minority under the banner inscribed with our principles rather than an almighty and everlasting majority purchased by their abandonment."

MORE THAN A WHISPER

ARE indeed is the Presidential contest which does not bring out a "whispering campaign"—that attempt to discredit a candidate by circulating slanderous stories reflecting upon his morals or motives. So it is refreshing to learn that occasionally political partisans dare to speak out boldly against an opponent instead of working against him secretly and in the dark—to shout rather than to whisper.

One of the earliest examples of this kind of campaigning took place during the Adams-Jackson contest in 1828. It was a printed placard which read:

IMMORALITY

"Fellow citizens, can we vote for the man who openly sets the laws of the great Jehovah at defiance, thereby showing a bad example to our children? Some few Sundays ago Mr. Adams passed through Providence galloping and running his horse, and at every tavern stopping to receive the salutes or huzzahs of the Federal Party. I have always been an Adams man until he violated and trampled on the laws of God; now my conscience forbids my supporting him. I therefore shall choose Andrew Jackson, one who keeps holy the Sabbath Day."

Farmer Thomas gave a new hand a plateful of mushrooms for his supper.

"Isn't anyone else having mushrooms for supper?" asked the hand, noticing that he was the only one eating them.

"We like them for breakfast best," said the farmer.

Next morning Thomas went to his new hand's room and asked him how he felt.

"Fine," said the hand.

Returning to the kitchen, and putting his head round the door, he shouted to his wife: "It's all right, Jane, they're not toadstools!"
